Mesh or not Mesh for POP Surgery

Author: Dr Aslam Mansoor

Pelvi-perineology unit. University Hospital of Clermont-Ferrand. France

The first decade of this century has seen the rapid development of mesh reinforcement surgery for pelvic organ prolapse. The advent of TVT in late nineties and the good vaginal tolerance of polypropylene encouraged surgeons to put large meshes to treat POP vaginally. The description of TOT was followed by the description of trans-obturator arms fixation of meshes. Tension-free Vaginal Mesh (T.V.M) and the world-wide distribution of kits with the aim of simplifying surgical techniques, thus making it accessible to every surgeon.

This popularization of synthetic meshes in POP surgery was accompanied by a rapid rise in reports of mesh related complications, with vaginal wall erosion up to 25%, chronic pain, 5.5% and sexual problems up to 17% (1).

These complications are often difficult to treat requiring further reconstructive surgeries. In July 2011, the FDA made a Safety Communication and Update on Serious complications associated with transvaginal placement of surgical mesh for POP. Read more

Successful Pelvic Organ Prolapse Mesh Procedures How to Choose the Right Physician

Sherrie Palm APOPS Founder and Executive Director

I have yet to meet an individual who was not nervous heading into surgery. We all hope our health concerns will be addressed and resolved when having surgical repair, we all hope procedures will be complication free. Every surgical procedure has risk factors, thus the importance of looking for the best clinician for our surgical needs and the best type of surgery to optimize results.

A common topic in APOPS support forum is the safety of mesh procedures for pelvic organ prolapse (POP) repair. Much has been addressed to improve outcomes of mesh procedures, yet fear factor remains for many women who read stories of mesh complications online or see lawsuit commercials on television. Seldom do women who've had successful mesh procedures talk about them, they simply get on with their lives. Read More
